

By adjusting the order of values in the struct, we can

1. achieve a lower size of the struct, therefore make the program more efficient in memory use; and
2. reduce memory waste, because the paddings between values are completely useless and cannot be used by other processes.